Chichester Festival Success

This year (as with every year over the last decade) the guitar section of Chichester Festival has grown. This time to include three new classes to accommodate the growing number of participants. Congratulations to all the guitarists who took part in the Festival and enriched every moment of two very busy days! As always a very warm welcome to all those who took part in the Festival for the first time. Listening to our regular performers it was very enjoyable to notice how much progress could be achieved in one year. It is inevitable that such a meticulously planned event has its last moment alterations. Ours began with having to divide three of the classes into two groups each such was the number of entries. Then, two days prior to the Festival came a phone call from our prospective adjudicator with an announcement that she was ill. As a result we had to stage a nation wide search for a competent adjudicator. We are extremely grateful to both Nicola Hall and Anthea Gifford - both well known performers and teachers with rich experience - for stepping in. Nicola created a warm and friendly working atmosphere in which even the shyest performers felt at ease. It was so wonderful to see how this stunning performer herself found so many attentive, caring and encouraging words for every player - and we heard on this day no fewer then 34 solo performances, ten duets, five trios, a quartet, a quintet and four guitar orchestras! Day two was dedicated to the adult performers. For all of us who have been following the Festival from year to year, it was obvious that the over.

Mandolin Delights

Following the delightful recital given by Neil Smith and Alison Stephens in January, a CD of guitar and mandolin music has been added to the Library collection. The Duetto Gioconda (Mirco Schrader - lute/guitar and Caterina Lichtenberg - mandolin) plays four Baroque Sonatas. These are followed by a change of style in a piece by Raffaele Calace (1863 - 1934) in which Caterina demonstrates a brilliant use of the mandolin tremolo. This gives the listener the opportunity.

all standard of performances was noticeably higher than a year ago. Regular opportunities to play at the club evenings must have helped!

It was very good to hear the comments of such an experienced musician and teacher as Anthea Gifford. Unlike the children, who regularly have contact with a teacher, most of us adults have no regular lessons and have to cope with a chorus of often contradicting influences. Anthea's direct and honest approach without flattering every good point in the performance was most constructive and helpful.
Both of our adjudicators were impressed with the atmosphere of the Festival and we are very pleased to announce that in the next season Nicola Hall and Anthea Gifford have both promised to come and play for us!

It would, of course, be impossible to organize and run such a rich musical event without a single hitch without the invaluable help of members of the club's committee and the club's friends. A big thank you to all who made this annual feast of the guitar such a success!

The mandolin, only lightly touched upon by Neil and Alison whose style as a duo is essentially "classical baroque", the guitar accompanying the melodic mandolin played with great panache by Alison.
We have to thank Austin Martin for some very welcome additions to our collection of printed music and I should also like to thank Chris Parsons for his contributions made soon after I took charge of the Library. Music donated to this section is greatly appreciated by our guitar playing members. There is now a reference list available for use by members.

DIY Arranging for the Guitar -  by Terry Woodgate

This is a short article intended to give advice to beginners on arranging pieces of popular music for the guitar. Although your arrangement may not be as inventive as that of the professional musician, there is a great deal of satisfaction to be gained from making your own arrangement and at least you will ensure that it is within your playing capabilities! Arranging a piece of music is certainly easier than composing music, and should not be viewed with any trepidation. You will come out of the experience considerably wiser and more knowledgeable than beforehand.

I would recommend that a beginner starts with a piece of music which gives chord symbols. A Beatles songbook, for example, can provide a wealth of music suitable for arranging for the guitar. Another rich source of material can be found in the popular music of the 20s and 30s when pop music was at its peak in creativity. These are now being reprinted with chords displayed - unlike the original sheet music.

The first problem is deciding on an appropriate key. I would suggest initially keeping to the key given in the music, unless it is one of those keys like Db or Eb that are quite unsuitable for the guitar. In this case transpose the music by a semitone to a more convenient key. Because the average keyboard player of today is not as capable as the average pianist of yesteryear, music publishers now produce many arrangements in the simpler keys and so it is possible to avoid the Ebs and Dbs. Play the chords and hum the tune to get a feel of the chords. The next step is to play the chord and fit the tune in around the chord. There are a number of ways of tackling this. If the music is a slow piece try to arpeggiate parts of the chord as accompaniment (say with a simple downward pass) whilst fitting in the tune. If the piece is to be played moderate to fast, try holding down the basic chord and fitting in an alternating bass accompaniment of string 5, string 4, string 6 and then string 4 while playing the tune on the top three strings. This can give a a in a chromatic run whensound reminiscent of the early 'stride' pianists of the 1920s who played such

Workshop with John Mills - Sunday 20th April, 1997

In the last few years John Mills - one of the best known guitarists and guitar teachers in the country has come several times to our area - as a performer (twice in our club alone), adjudicator and several times as teacher to the Classical Guitar Festival of Great Britain held at West Dean College. We have invited John Mills to the club this year - to give a Class for our members and guitar enthusiasts from the South of England. We plan to offer three sessions during the day - an ensemble masterclass, a group workshop, and if time allows, an opportunity for private tuition. Please see the enclosed leaflet for further details and let us know as soon as possible which sessions you are interested in attending. This is an exciting opportunity to work with such a renowned musician, guitarist and tutor and interest is bound to be high!
Lyrical Ashford

Mark Ashford, winner of the prestigious Julian Bream prize, was the latest virtuoso guitarist to be welcomed to the Club on Saturday, 1st March.

The attentive audience appreciated both the clarity and precision of his interpretation of Bach’s Prelude, Fugue and Allegro (BWV 998) and the lyricism of Sor’s Concerto Studies. Domeniconi’s Kayunbaba, with its Turkish imagery, completed the first half of the programme, the guitar having been retuned to capture the insistent oud-like quality of the theme.

Rodrigo’s Three Spanish Pieces were played memorably after the interval, with the concentrated intensity which was the hallmark of Mark Ashford’s performance. The dissonant crush-chords of the fandango, the mellifluous intermediate pieza and the speed and fluency of the clog-dance contrasted strikingly with the romantic dreaminess of Barios’ Un Sueno en la Floresta which followed.

The advertised programme finished with Koskin’s black-humoured Usher Waltz - but it was the Celtic lament, Farewell to Stromness, by Peter Maxwell-Davies, played feelingly as an encore, which worked its special magic on the departing audience.

This can give a a in a chromatic run when sound reminiscent of the early ‘stride’ pianists of the 1920s who played such wonderfully ‘bouncy’ pieces. As a variation, the tune can also be played on the bass 3 strings while fitting in arpeggios on the top 3 strings.

The technique of separating the bass and melody line may well require a key change from the original. Keys of C and G are generally favourites for keeping in the lower positions on the guitar, but this is not always the case. For more advanced arrangements try keys of E or A. With these keys, it is possible to have some open strings ringing on while playing notes in the 5th and 7th positions which gives a nice effect. Furthermore while the open strings ring on, it is possible to change position with no break in the music.

The Fretful Federation &
“Mandolinix”

The Fretful Federation is a new and exciting Plucked Orchestra that was founded after the success of “The Modern Box” performance at Brighton Festival, in 1995. “Mandolinix” is the name of the senior orchestra. There is also the expanding junior orchestra, still “The Fretful Federation”, for amateur musicians. They play a style of music that was made popular in the 1930’s by hundreds of mandolin ensembles and orchestras for whom the Banjo, Mandolin and Guitar Federation was a focus. The music they play encompasses 1930’s Music Hall, Eastern European, Spanish, Classical (Tschaikowsky, Shostakovich, Boccherini etc…) and contemporary styles. Ian Harris, their director, also writes original music for the ensemble. For further details phone Ian on 01273 557035.
